THE AMERICAN ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

LETTER FROM E. K KANE.

nunkated for the Tributes.

LANCASTER SOUND, between Cape Crawford and York, Westnesday, August 21. The "North Star," dear ---, is reported safe at Leopold Harbor, the last years wintering asylum of Sir James Ross We are now making all sail to meet her, and it may be to obtain a homeward conveyance for a hurried outline of news. Gather around you our little home circle, none of them will complain of my addressing to you what is meant for all.

On the 6th of July while fanning along between the Great Pack and the shore ice of Uppernavik, we met a couple of Esquimaux Kaiacks. By them I sent my last home dispatches. On the day after this we saw ahead of us the three islands of Baffin, and ran on with a fine fresh breeze intending to pursue the coastward route successful with other navigators. Unfortunately, however, the Great Pack perhaps better known to you as the Middle Ice, presented a great inden-, ture to the westward which invited us to enter-We did so but the result proved unwisely.

BAFFIN'S BAY.

The worst feature-in fact the chief drawback of Ballin's Bay navigation is what is called its "Middle Ice." When winter, which here exceeds in intensity any cold within your concep-tion, fully sets in, all the great bay with its sounds, inlets and entering bays becomes one solid mass of ice. Except the ridge hammocks or the entrapped bergs, there is no diversity of surface; Greenland and America are comented together. Nor does it stop here; extending down along the western coast it chokes up the great bay of Hudson, travels down Labrador, enters the straits of Belle Isle, and but for the gulf stream would belt in Newfoundland. Summer, a brief, ardent season of constant life, aided by nature's local compensating influences, makes rapid inroads upon this icy sea, and at a period varying with the openness of the season, leaves the sole monument of all this a huge central tongue of ice, known technically to voyagers as the Middle Pack.

THE MIDDLE ICE.

The position of the ice, its character, its conof ice. Except the ridge hammocks or the en-

The position of the ice, its character, its con nection with the headlands of the coast, its drift, its period of liberation, &c. &c. form a body of practical questions, to be determined only by close observation of winds, season, and the host of lit-tle indications which experience, by a sort of tactpoints out to men who make it the business of points out to men who make it the business of their lives. Such men are the whalers who, since Sir John Ross's first voyage, more than thirty years ago, have made these seas their peculiar fishing ground. And the British Expeditions are there-fore accompanied by a set of men known as "Ice Masters" and "Greenland Pilots," who are looked upon as indispensable to a Polar cruise. We have none. The notes of the Whaling routes furnished by the Royal lustnester at Discodedlare npon as indispensable to a Polar cruise. We have none. The notes of the Whaling routes furnished by the Royal Inspector at Disco declare the middle passage an impossibility in the latitude of 73° and thereabouts. Save Parry once, no one has successfully achieved it, and even he, upon a second attempt, was beset and failed. The whaling routes were by Melville Bay, past Cape York, to the Northera Edge of the Pack, along the vacant space between 75° 50° and 77°, known by them as the North Water. Scorsby's list of successful passages confirms the necessity of following the open shore line, and the general tener of printed authorities points to the same conclusion. You must not think, therefore, that we have suffered any particular ill luck. On the contrary we partly anticipated our experience.

For a time it was favorable. We made forty miles westward in nearly open water; but soon streams of loose ice-tongues from the main barrier thrust themselves before as; we plunged deeper and deeper into its marginal ice, it closed as we advanced, and the early morning of the 8th found us stuck fast as a fly upon a newly varnished table.

NEAR DEVIL'S TONGUE.

NEAR DEVIL'S TONGUE Here, then, behold us with a horizon of icecovered snow! The Devil's Tongue, a striking landmark off Baffin's Islands, rising up before us a monument of our forlornness! Now came into play the ice-chain and saw, the ax and the windlass, the tow-rope and the warping hawser. Endless were the tickings of the capstan pawls and the splicings of the main brace. Leads (open lanes of water) seemed to open constantly. Heading still west, every day found us deeper in thrall, and when we were disposed to congratulate ourselves most on our progress, we turned round to see the Devil's Tongue still fork-not pass altogether without pastime. We are, on board, a harmonious little band of brothers, our Captain of happy temperament and disposed to make others happy around him. Where variety failed to enliven us, hard work kept us from think has to ensure the flavor of the prisoner. The prisoner is a friend of the prisoner, as allowed in his evidence contradicted—as for instance—after saying "Col. McClellan had threatened to commence the flavoring on him." While we continued thus in pack, our time did ing too constantly of failure. White bears and seals, the latter very namerous, the former in numbers sufficient to give us no less than five perilous chases over the ice fides, offered us abundant stir and excitement. You may ask me hereafter for some of my adventures and escapes, but I write so slow in this extreme cold, that I cannot set through with what I coust say if I indulge in get through with what I must say if I indulge in episode. THE WEATHER CHANGES. At last the elequently continued bathos of the barometer, falling by regular decrements, foretold a change in the weather. On the evening of the 28th, the leads began to open, and a South-Easter hauling around to East drove us through the floes. Tempting water to the Northward, to say nothing of our three weeks' duress, caused a change of views and of our course with them; and by the morning of the 29th water, ice-encircled, but nevertheless water, splashed around our bows. A STORM AMONO THE BERGS. The breeze, however, freshened to a gale. Our course was toward Melville Bay, a little to the West of North; the Rescue following close in our wake. Here, again, with the wind roaring and the shore-swell undulating around us, we made a tongue of field-ice, garnished with terrific bergs. Boring into it, we had for half an hour a scene which I think would compare with some of Beechey's Spitzbergen splendid horribles. For a few minutes that we were in the thick of the thunder-storm of grinding icebergs, and crashing ice-flocs, I thought that the little brig Advance and all its freight would render a troublesome task the recall and rounce of the present of the great day when particles generally are needed and mended. Here, again, you may ask me for a story in detail, but I begin to think already of the meminisse jurabit when (and if) I return safe home. Anchoring to the great shore ice, in places ten feet thick, and working along by a regular contest, by the 30th we had dragged ourselves well into the moving ice, and were in the region of the Nips, which are such a bugbear of the whalers. the shore-swell undulating around us, we made a DUNICA BAY. By the 2d of August we had still, by constant warping, worked ourselves well toward Dunica Bay. Instead of the snow-covered prairie, interspersed with black water patches, like uncle George's blackbird marsh in skating time, the ice was here firm, thick and resisting. What little open water we had, beat against an iron-bound ice coast. There the floes and hummock ridges, packed and driven into walls above the foundation ice itself, sometimes 12 and 14 feet thick. Marks is the wildest commotion were everywhere, and effects of upheaving forces, only to be compared with the uplifting axes of great geological eras. Admidst this fierce wreck and ruin, and above it all, their offect, hightened by our consciousness of danger near them, rose the isolated ice mountains—the kingly bergs. Some, though not aground, stood as firm as the land, their huge bulk not seeming to vibrate even with the drift of the field ice that split in scales against their basis; others, as if driven by an awful will, came drifting down upon us, crushing and tearing everything before them in their way. The hight of some of these was 250 feet by measurement.

The hight of some of these was 250 feet by measurement.

I had unprefunite been to fill many pages with conclusive observations upon the ice movements. My journal will probably show some exceptions to the received rules with regard to them. In one case, in this Dunica Bay, on the night of the 1st of August, when the wind was south-easterly, and the current, as determined by the surface ice, in accordance with Capt. Becomey's south western drift, I observed the berg ice making a northern progress of one knot and a half an hour, while the floes went eff to the south-westward at the rate of two knots. The submersion of the berg, and the local influences, tides, &c. operating upon and the local influences, tides, &c. operating upon them, are hardly sufficient to explain this faot, and it is certainly a curious one.

BREAKING THE ICE.

While working through the almost super, natural congeries here, one of our ice anchors, attached to a warping line, and with its hook buried in an iceberg, with a sudden detonation cleft the mass asunder, toppling into the chasm thus formed a worthy fellow named Costa, The detached mass would have crushed our brighad we been a trifle nearer. Luckily, too, its fracture was so clean, that when it rose, placid as Neptune herself, from the deep, it lifted up with it poor Costa, free from all hurt, though nearly scared to death.

We have parled five sables, lost three anchors.

scared to death.

We have parted five cables, lost three anchors, and escaped uncounted drownings from breaking through the ice. Out of our little party on board the Advance, there are but two officers and men included that have escaped their ducking. The Captain and myself have each been in twice. On one occasion I had a heavy ship's musket, supplied by the astonishing liberality of Uncle Sam under the name of "Fowling Piece," as a "Life Preserver." My only regret is that I saved the musket.

BEARS. Thus we warped and sailed on, our hopes lessening every day with our progress. On the eighth, the Rescues shot a bear within two hun. dred yards of our excited noses-we had no unoccupied boat. On the 11th, while sailing in misty fog through a briefly opened lead, no less than six bears were in sight at the same time. It will seem strange to you that I who have held It will seem strange to you that I who have held slayers of shipe and murderers of woodcock in such small esteem should become an enthusiastic and brutal hunter. But I have come down to it. Many and many a mile with a heavy rifle and my little double barrel have I followed savagely these wretched bears. On the occasion just mentioned three took the water together and we mutually charged each other, a whide-boat full of hunters against three purpled muzzled Polar bears. We killed one.

nursing. In two days we shot 420. It seemed a sin in one of my temperament to be such a destroyer of family happiness. But this climate, that makes wolves crazy with hunger, postpones the bowels of compassion to those which are less figurative. The little Guillemots are sweet and game flavored; as large as a Partridge and overy

they are fat and stupid.

From the Mexican Boundary Commission. San Pedro Springs Encampment, October 3, 1850. To the Editors of The New-York Tribune:

In the case of John Tennant of the Boundary Commission mentioned in my last, the coroners inquest was present at the scene of bloodshed on Saturday, and the court after opened proceedings in the plaza, on plea put in by prisoner's counsel, "that there had not been time to summon witnesses and prepare for trial," the Court was adjourned to Sunday, 9 A.M. The first witness for prosecution was Dr. Bigelow, attached to the Commission, who proved that death was caused by Turner's bowie knife, having entered below the last rib. Ou being asked, "had he known of any previous quarrel between the deceased and prison-?" prisoners' counsel objected to question, "as there was no right to go back of the deed itself to prove malicious intent." The mayor, Dr. Devine and court overruled objection, "that a full vine and court overruled objection, "that a full and impartial examination for prosecution and defense should go on." Witness stated that pravious threats were uttered by prisoner on the marsh, which were substantiated by Beckwith and Smith, who heard prisoner say, "if meat were dealt to him as before, he would rip Tennant's guts out." Several witnesses proved the cold-blooded dand; and evidence for the prisoner being introduced, his counsel tried to prove, that the Americans tried "to bear down" on the Texans, that Col. McClellan had threatened to flog the teamsters, and that Tennant, "a pet of the Col, acted according to the adage, like master like man;" thus deceased came to his death from ill-treatment to prisoner.

had threatened to commence the flogging on him,"
"he felt satisfied there was not a better man on the expedition than the Colonel," and again, in speaking of some words between him and deceased, "he believed Tennant a good man, and feit himself more to blame than deceased with regard to words that passed between them on the march." His evidence was often anomalous from counter-statement—a leaning to side of prisoner:
yet he could not conscientiously state anything against the Commission.

On Monday morning the counsel for the prisoner opened a defense, wearisome from repetition of expression on the tew weak points contended for.
"Tennant's standing surrounded by friends, who never interfered to prevent collision," which ac-never interfered to prevent collision," which ac-cording to his showing, "was on equal grounds, as Tennant's friends could at a moment snatchup the cording to his showing, "was on equal growings, as Tennant's friends could at a moment snatchap the knife, but apparently thrown aside, (even as readily as the prisoner from his belt) and either hand it to Tennant or assassinate prisoner who had no one to back him." In such a position "it would be cowardly for an American, but much more for a Texan, not to have done otherwise." "Malicious intent could not be proved, therefore the verdict must be at most manislaughter," as in similar cases, "quoted." "A abases B, who strikes, and is struck in return, (the second blow in the eye of the law, the weighty one) on which B kills A, in such case the verdict can only be manislaughter." After frequent repetitions and citations his anxious and sleepless (a word energetically put in, I felt to swaken any who might nod under influence of heat, or prosy repetitions) considerations, the counsel for prosecution proved from testimony and the law, that there could not be a more cold blooded act, and in such cases as quoted, there was no similarity, the finding acceptable to law was the murdent in the first dorre-be a more cold-blooded act, and in such cases as quoted, there was no similarity, the finding according to law must be murder in the first degree, either from proof of malice, or the nature of weapon handled. Finally, the prisoner was committed to take his trial for murder before the next jury which will sit this week.

Life is not much regarded in this quarter of the world. Death by knife or bullet often averages from one to two a night. The body of a German has just been discovered in the immediate neighborhood of the camp, after a bullet passed through his head. There is no security in those fandangees, filled with the most fearful looking characters, supported by means derived from gambling, forcigees, filled with the most learnit looking characters, supported by means derived from gambling, forcible plunder, and the arts of female accomplices. Dancing to a fiddle, gambling at monté, drinking fiery liquid, apish antics, cursing and swearing form the charms of an evening closed by many a dark learner.

The Indians have been committing much depredation in the neighborhood of Medina; the main body of the Camanches is on the Brazos.—A party from El Paso, under a Col. McClellan, just arrived, met some of the Delaware Indians, Free Schools—A Head Tax.

To the Editor of The Tribune:
NEW-York, Wednesday, Oct. 23. I see in your paper of yesterday (22d inst) a letter from Mr. Darius Monroe of Cayuga Co. submitting a plan for the support of Free Schools in the State of New-York.

The only remark you make is, that you non-concur in his substitute, which is very unsatisfactory. You will oblige many of your daily readers by giving your reasons more at length for non-con-curring with him.

As far as I am capable of judging of its merits.
I think it the most feasible plan yet proposed, only the Poll Tax ought to be $1 per head instead of 25 cents, which would yield revenue sufficient to support Schools throughout the State at least six months in the year. months in the year, Yours, &c. J. C. SUFFERN.

Reply.—It is a sufficient objection to Mr. Monroe's plan that a twenty-five cent polltax would cost half it would yield, and be a very annoying, mischief-making affair every way. Its collection at the bullot-box would be especially odious. We don't want to drive Legal Voters from the Polls. any more than Children from the Schools. All that this tax would produce would hardly be felt as a mitigation by the present tux-payers, but would be felt by the new

- Mr. Suffern's plan has more substance in $1, and therefore is the more objectionable. We will illustrate it: There are about sixty men employed in The Tribune office, twelve of whom are interested in the establishment; the remainder are only hired and paid wages. Suppose the present tax on the establishment is $200 per annum, all paid (directly) by the proprietors. Mr. Suffern proposes to take $50 of this tax off the publishers and lay it on the hired workmen,-and this not in proportion to their earnings, but so as to require those who earn but $8 per week to pay as much as those who receive $25. To this arrangement we offer but two objections at present -first, we think the workmen wouldn't stand it; and secondly we think they ought not to. We have more if needed, but space is precious. [Ed. The ship Quebec sailed from New York in company with the ships Oswego and Rockaway. Captain J. A. Pratt, of the U. S. steamer Mary Somera, at Saluria, mouth of the bay, wrote Capt. Baker on the 3d inst. that Captain Dunham had come in, and reported that the Indians had been within thirty miles of Saluria. They came down to Capt. Tucker's rancho. Previous to that they had been to a German's house, ten miles from Lemar, and captured two of his daughters—one about eight years of age, the other eighteen—the latter just about to be married. They carried them off with a considerable lot of horses and cattle.

There is no knowing what depredations the Indians have committed along the whole line, as Deputy Marshal Wm. Dahl, who has been en gazed in taking the census at Pembina, arrived on Wednesday hast. He brings of coarse a variety of interesting information, which will find its appropriate place in an abstract of the census for this Territory, which we will give to our readers as soon as the returns are all in. Mr. Dahl strip was by water, in the convenient conveyance of the Chippewas—the birch bark canoe. He found it necessary to make 27 portages, the longest of which from Gull Lake to Crow Wing, is 30 miles. Red Lake portage is 20 miles; Cass Lake portage 8; the other are two or three miles, more or less. The crops upon Red Riverbottom were entirely destroyed by the unusually high waters, and many houses swept away.

pewas, and five were murdered and scalped.—
The tomahawk and scalping knife are never buried between these two tribes. However fair and specious their treaties may seem, they are only observed until a fair obportunity occurs for murder and plunder. Temprations of this kind are never resisted. Their katred is so strong and of such long standing that it seems as natural for them to murder each other as for the eagle to pounce upon his prey.

The educational interests of Pembina are not in the most fluttering state of prosperity. Their schoolmaster seems to have gone abroad, and to have forgotten to return. Out of 1,166 inhabitants but 26 know how to read and write—15 males and 11 females. [Minnesota Chron. and Reg. 14th.]
